

NADE, 2004 St. Louis, Missouri

I felt that NADE 2004 was a wonderful conference. I liked the conference because it was big enough to be highly informative and small enough not to overwhelm those participating. I attended many good sessions. One of the best sessions was a session presented by Professor Jane Tichenor on "Creating Harmony: Mentoring Adjunct Faculty". The session was very timely and informative for my purposes. There were several other sessions presented on areas that I was interested in. I attended a session named "Learning Disabled Students in your Developmental Classrooms". The presenter spoke about the need for teaching to different learning styles in order to accommodate different types of learners and how this ties in with disabled students. Another session I attended which inspired me was entitled, "The Early Alert & Intervention Program at CCBC". They had some very practical ways of reaching out to struggling students and intervening into student's academic career to help them be successful. Each session I attended provided me with a lot of information and resources. Even the social events provided a lot of educational benefits, at least the one I attended at the History Museum hosting the Lewis and Clark Expedition Story. I thoroughly enjoyed the experience.

Submitted by: Gail Stringer, Chair of Mathematics & Science Division and Coordinator of Developmental Education Program